Meditations and Readings of St. Alphonsus de Liguori
Patience in the Midst of Spiritual Desolation (con't)

Love is not proved so much in following Jesus when He caresses you, as in seeking after Him when He flies from you. But, says St. Bernard, fear not, fear not of the Spouse hides His face for a little; know that He does all for your good; He withdraws for your security, lest, finding yourself greatly caressed, you begin to despise others by esteeming yourself better than them; and He withdraws also that you may desire Him with greater ardor, and seek after Him with greater solicitude. You must in the meantime persevere in your pious exercises, though you should suffer in them the agonies of death: far more painful was the agony your Lord suffered in the Garden of Gethsemane when He was praying for you, and preparing to go to die for you. Being in an agony he prayed the longer --- (Luke xxii. 43). Be constant, then in seeking after Jesus; He will not delay long to come to bestow consolations and tenderness, be content with receiving from Him courage and strength to love Him without the recompense of present delights. God is better pleased with a strong rather than with a tender love.

From a meditation book of Montalembert

If it could be granted to us to have lived at the time when Jesus lived in the world, and to see Him for only a moment, we should have chosen that one, when He was on His way, crowned with thorns, and bent with weariness, to Calvary. And so we may thank God that He has placed the short moment of our mortal life at a time when His holy religion has fallen on evil days. We can gather up lovingly the fragments of His Cross and vow Him an eternal devotion. They have shattered it on our Churches; we will put it in our hearts, and there, we shall keep it in perpetual memory.
